

Some one has remarked that it is a peculiar coincidence that apartment houses and dresses fastened in the back should have hit Salt Lake about the same time, and incidentally should have caused a great deal of inconvenience and much hilarity. One woman suggests that the janitors in the large apartment houses be instructed in the gentle art of hooking gowns. Many ludicrous stories are told of the strenuous efforts of various individuals in getting "hooked up," and one clever young matron has announced her intention of keeping a cow to hook her up to the back. Recently a lone female situated in an apartment house found herself in need of help in this line, and brought the aid of her neighbor across the hall. After adjusting her long, handsome princess gown, she donned her hat and reconnoitered up and down the hall to be sure that no mere man should be in sight. Slipping furtively across the corridor, she rang the bell at her friend's door and awaited her coming. Just at this moment a door opened down the hall and, fearing lest some man should emerge the lone female turned her rather plump and comely back toward the friend's door and stood close. As the door opened she made a partial turn to confront—not the friend, but the friend's highly amused husband, who had been taking in the situation with a good deal of glee before his wife arrived on the scene.

The month just opening bids fair to be a busy one in the matter of building nests for the newly mated. There were something like 300 matches completed last June, according to the estimates, and judging by the forewarnings there will be an excess of that number this season. Every day sees more "dates set," and some few Wednesdays (the popular day of the week) will have to accommodate fully seventeen "happily mated." Already the fair young brides are getting weary of the long lists of alleged entertainments in their honor, and are wishing they had decided, as "he" wished, to have the affair a quiet one.

The week just closed has been a full one in a social way, with numerous large entertainments and the splendid theatrical attractions of the week end. Every day has been a gala day at the Country club, for the grounds never before presented the fine outlook they do now. Luncheons and dinners innumerable have been the order there, and the athletic side of the club has not been neglected. The main chance just now is on the ladies' four, and the gift of Mrs. Arthur Bird, will be awarded the winner in each set.

Congratulations have been flying fast from their many Salt Lake friends to Captain and Mrs. William P. Platt at Fort Monroe, on the recent promotion of Captain Platt. When they left Salt Lake, less than two years ago, Mr. Platt was a second lieutenant and his two promotions have given great satisfaction to his friends. Mrs. Platt, formerly Miss Isabel Monahan, was considered a reigning belle during the short time she remained a Salt Lake girl after her return from college.

The swain who pays his devotions in the truly sentimental way of having finally given up his suit to the fair lady and it is said by his intimates that his favorite quotation now reads, "What's the use of red lips, if they never say yes?" DOHL BARET.

CURRENT EVENTS IN LOCAL SOCIETY

Mrs. C. P. Brooks was the hostess yesterday at a large and elaborate bridge tea, at which some fifty of her friends were entertained. The house was bright with roses throughout, red and white roses making a picture of the dining table. Ten tables of bridge were played, and prizes were awarded the winners at each table. At the tea which followed, the hostess was assisted by Mrs. Matthew Cullen, while Mrs. Murray Godbe and Mrs. Henry Pitts poured tea and coffee. Several friends came in after the game for tea.

Miss Mary Olive Gray entertained about thirty young girls yesterday afternoon at a musical at her home in honor of Miss Beattie Williamson. The rooms were fragrant with the season's flowers, and some splendid musical numbers were rendered by Miss Edna Bailey, Miss Edna Dwyer, Miss Esther Allen, Miss Emily Jessup, Miss Lena Morse, Miss Anna Rogers, Miss Maud Thorne, Miss Beatrice O'Connor and Miss Jeanette Williamson.

Mrs. W. F. Adams entertained a party of eight friends yesterday morning at Saltair, a dip in the lake, a luncheon and bridge making the program. The guests returned on the afternoon train.
